Please Note:

Indigenous History Month: In addition to dispossessing the Native Peoples of the Americas of their land, European colonization was spurred on by new financial inventions like joint-stock companies and maritime insurance, and the development of new markets for commodities like cotton, sugar, and furs. The concentration of wealth that this produced in Europe, and especially in Britain, was a cornerstone of the Industrial Revolution that created the mass-produced, fossil-fuel-driven world in which we live today. We are wealthier, healthier, longer-lived, and exert more power over our world than at any time in history because of the wealth that European ancestors took from the New World, and from the peoples living there. ~ David Duke
